I have a Spyderco Gayle Bradley and cpm 4 Millie. I forced a a patina on the GB and left the juice from cutting an orange on the blade longer than I should have on purpose. I like the look of a patnina on cpm 4. With a light/medium patina you don't have to worry about corrosion IMO. I still wipe/wash off the blade after I use it tho.

CPM 9V Powder Metal Tool Steel. CPM 9V is a powder metal tool steel that provides very high wear resistance in combination with high impact toughness. A large volume of hard vanadium carbides provides the high wear resistance. CPM 9V contains less carbon and vanadium than CPM 10V, which results in a lower attainable hardness, slightly lower wear resistance, but a significant increase in toughness.

High Speed Steel | CPM 9V Steel | CPM 9V Technical Data

However toughness is a step property in that as long as the user doesn't exceed the abilities of the steel, it will be fine, there is no gradual degradation like wear or corrosion. Relative to other steels, the impact toughness of CPM-10V is similar to D2 at 62 RC. The other issue is with corrosion resistance. It will rust quite readily.

CPM 154 aims for a Rockwell C hardness of 58 – 60 Rc. The composition is exactly the same as it is for 154CM, the only difference being the CPM forming process. It holds a better edge and has a higher corrosion resistance than 154CM as well. It will more readily polish to a mirror finish and is easier to grind than CPM S30V.
