I've been playing with a Micro Nikkor 55mm f2.8 recently (manual focus, non-CPU lens) and the focus indicators work fine with it. There are one or two companies out there that make split-screen focusing screens for the D7000 (and many other DSLRs). These work just like the old film SLRs that you know and are designed for manual focus.

M means manual focus. You turn the focus ring yourself. AF ... Once you select 3d, select a sensor with the rear multi-control switch, and as soon as the D7000 gets something in focus, the D7000 will track that sucker all over the frame. The D7000 is the smartest camera on earth for doing this, at least as I write this in January 2011. ...

Switch the Focus Mode Selector switch from AF to M to select manual focus. Some lenses have switches too, you only need to change on the DSLR or lens - not both. If your lens has M/A and M markings then it has "full time manual focus" - which means you can manually override the AF any time - using the focus ring.

Some subjects confuse even the most sophisticated autofocus systems, causing a camera's autofocus motor to spend a long time "hunting" for its focus point. Autofocus systems also struggle in dim lighting, although that difficulty is often offset on the Nikon D3100, D5100, or D7000 by the AF-assist lamp, which shoots out a beam of light [...]

This is an old thread, but I do have first hand experience with the issue of FAST manual focus lenses on Nikon D7000 ( and D300, D2X, D700) . The problem only occurs with lenses faster than F3.5. This is unfortunate since the D7000 has the great focus confirmation dot and pointers system that work so well on my D2X and D700.
